"Set on a cliffside against a rocky backdrop in the in a fairy-tale scenery of Ravello, this majestic period villa with pool affords unobstructed views of the Amalfi coast and the Tyrrhenian Sea, providing a unique holiday experience on Italy's most exclusive stretch of coast."

Built in 1930 by Lord Grimthorpe for his second daughter, this villa was once the private paradise of the American writer Gore Vidal, who took inspiration from the stunning views all around his house, to write his works. Carefully renovated in recent years, this property still retains many of its original features including barrel-vaulted ceilings, arched doorways and windows, long tiled hallways open to spacious rooms with fireplaces, balconies and patios.

The entire house is fully air conditioned and can accommodate a large family or a group of friends with rooms ranging from suites, junior suites and deluxe rooms, sleeping up to 12 people. A few minutes' walk along a scenic route from Ravello's central Piazza Duomo (the villa can only be reached by foot) brings you to the main entrance, through a private garden with swimming pool. There are 30 steps down from the path to the villa's main entrance. The main building is spread over an area of 850 square metres, including terraces and balconies, and is surrounded by 10,000 m2 parkland encompassing lemon trees, olive groves, cypresses, palms and pergolas.
